

UNSOLVED MURDER

REWARD OFFERED
100K

Mr James William Durrant was brutally murdered on October 26th, 1988. after returning home from a meeting at the Grand Hall of Freemasonry in London.

The killer left him unrecognisable, and did not take cash or any objects from the home, solely paperwork.

It was reported by Thames News at the time and appeared on Crimewatch.

His murder investigation lasted for only three months and appears to have been shut down in January 1989.

The next review was by the Metropolitan Police force in 2016 allegedly, but when one of his grandson's looked into the family trusts and whether they were linked to his murder in January 2020 the same police force threatened to arrest the grandson. Why?

What do they have to hide?
Is the murder unlisted?
The Metropolitan Police force is unwilling to say.

The historical murder squad from the Metropolitan Police Force eventually made contact with the grandson when he shared coverage by Thames TV at the time of Mr Durrant's murder.

The "cold cases" murder squad from London then emailed the grandson and asked was his grandfathers murder solved or unsolved.

Surely they should know ?

Many money transactions have been traced thanks to the offshore data leaks which point strongly to the Isle of Man.

Mrs Durrant, James William's widow, was a Manx resident when she passed away and the family would like to offer the below reward"

A £100k reward offered for information leading to the conviction of persons involved in what we are sure was the financially motivated murder of Mr James William Durrant.
